To place such a man in command of San José was a grave indiscretion, for which the ample pountary indomnity accorded to Mr. Magee is but an imperfect atonement. Only one other incident in the painful business requires notice : before the entire matter is dismissed from discussion. It is stated that the preservation of Mr. Magea from a violent death was largely owing to the spirited intervention and good management of the United States Consul, Mr. James, at the imminent risk gentleman's humane and confugeous conduct may be rewarded by a few words of grateful appreciation from our Foreign Office I Lord Derby, as Mr. Magee's official apperior, can hardly do less, and he enight, without showing. undue favour, do even more DISCHARGE NOTES. extend his researches from such points as the build and loading of ships to grievances that closely affect the poor sailor for other ways than those directly endangering his life. Fow. landsmen are award of the almost absolute power a shipmaster wields over those under his control, not merely while on board ship. but after they have arrived in port. When fook wo to travelling trader. the sailors are paid of the captain grants what are called discharge notes, and le may endorse on these good characters for the sailors; or he may decline to do so, and simply write across the discharge a statement to that effect. Should be do so the consequences to the sailor are almost rainous, since he is thus classed, and without any explanation, with men of bid character, or atterly useless as seamendrunkards, lubbers, or thieves. But although this stigma may be undeserved. Jack appears to have absolutely no redress, unless it be in an appeal to the Board of Trade, whose permanent sccretary will acknowledge receipt of the memoria, promise full consideration, and then go to sleep over it. Possibly it may be thought that more caprice on the part of ship masters is uncommon, and that there must be good reason for a captain declining to certify to the oboracter of men who have been under his eye so long, and whom he must know much better than ordinary masters do their servante. But here we come to the point which concerns Mr. Plimsoll. If seamen are often refused characters on excellent moral! grounds, they are also, it is too certain, thus injured because they bave only too faithfully corrected the captain's delinquencies. For instance, a resset may be deliberately overloaded, whether with the connivance of the shipowner does not matter for the argument; an honest mate may point it out, and suggest that the feult should be corrected, or a craw may properly refuse to lisk their lives by going to see in auch a vessel-and then the til 1671 Heagkong, Shanghat, Cologne (Germany) master, to save himself, may adopt the simple course of blasting the characters of those who may thus denounce him by declining to give them a good certificate. INTERESTING TRIBUTE OF GRATITUDE. Not-many weeks before his death, Charles Dickens received from Liverpool a letter from a person describing himself as a self-raised man, who attributed his prosperous career to what Dickens's writings had tought him of the wisdom of kindness, sympathy, &c. He begged to offer some acknowledgement, and enclosed £500. Dickens was greatly touched by this, and told the writer, in sending back his cheque, that he would have taken it. if he had not been himself a prosperous man but if the writer pleased to send him any small memorial, he would gladly accept it A richly worked basket of silver, incribed "from one who has been cheered and stimulated by Mr. Dickens's writings, and held the author among his first remembrances when he became prosperous.", was accompanied by a handsome silver centre piece for the table, representing the seasons. The kindly donor shrank from sending winter to one whom he would fain connect with none but the brighter and milder days, and he had struck the fourth figure from the design. " never look at it," said Dickens, "that I don't think most of the winter."—Forster's Life of Dickens.

In some parts of the country, the same puzzle takes another form. In Sussex, between Hurstmoncoux and Hailsham, is a stone, said to have been used by the Druids for sacrificial purposes. and known as "The Amber Stone." Not far from it is another stone, concerning which Welsh gentleman, residing in the neighbourhood of Aberystwith, mentioned to the writer his having beard a similar myth. So probably various stones in various parts of the country avermade use of to mystify unsuspicious youth before the mind is logical enough to take in the force of " when it hears the cock crow!"

ANTIDOTE AGAINST RABLES.

Dr. Jitzky lately communicated a very in teresting circumstance to the Imperial Society of Wilna, in Russia, respecting a very vicious dog, who had a habit of rending pers (Coluber berus) into pieces, and whose inuszle and neck were covered with tumours produced by the bites of these reptiles. This dog was bitten by a rabid dog, which had caused death from hydrophobia to several horned animals and a young dog. The owner of the first-mentioned dog, who valued it, kept it alive, but watched it continually, so as to destroy it on the first appearance of ra-CHINA AND JAPAN MARINE INSU bies. No sympton of the disease, however, appeared; and to the great astonishment of Dr. Jitzky and of its owner, the dog continued in perfect health. DIAMOND DÍGGING.

Yes, it was a gay and charming occupation, this diamond digging, at the first. English emigrants, even used to all sorts of unnecessary comforts, would have found little for complaint. To dwell in a tent well shaded by trees is luxury in a South African summer. Only the monotonous and neverchanging mutton, though it were less than a poony a pound, and the utter dearth of vegetables, give cause to grumble. Colonial born did not see any inconvenience here, of course, having no other experience. Diamonds were tolerably abundant amongst the shingle. He who had not in memory the amazing ewel-pits of New Rush would say they were more fully tolerably abundant. It is thought that about three hundred thou. There were not more than two thousand diggers, in all the campa though I am quite willing w believe that the population amounted to ten thousand or more. The average, therefore, would be one hundred and fifty pounds pet man-a much larger sum in Cape Colony than here perhaps three times as large-certainly twice. In the healthiest climate of the world, in work not too exhausting, in scenes levelier than they had dreamt of all were making money; and some fortunes. Naseby, in fact, stands high above the valleys, bogs, and damps, a fact which perhaps accounts for farmer of Naseby, named Corby, living to his ninety-fourth year, and cutting a complete new set of teeth at the infantine age of seventy. It is remarked that these upland dwellers talk in a shout as if, amid the winds and storms of the high land, low and gentle speech was ineffective.
